Credibility License (Concept Principle Attribution) 1.0 – Full Text
Preamble This license permits use of the Principle Concept Principle (as defined below) subject to the attribution and responsible-use requirements set out in this document. The license is provided without warranty. This license governs the use of the expression and documented formulations of the Concept Principle; it does not by itself create rights in abstract of law, it merely draws attention to the principle that the laws are based on, and has provision to supersede within bounds of the stated principle.

1. Definition of Scope This license does not claim ownership over the inalienable right to pursue happiness. That right is universal, pre-existing, and not subject to exclusive control. The intellectual property covered under this license consists solely of: 1. The restored and logically complete definition of the inalienable right to pursue happiness, defined as the mutual, non-exploitative condition in which one's pursuit of happiness must not prevent another person from pursuing theirs; and 2. The conceptual application of that restored definition, including its use as:

- a civilizational security protocol,
- a governing kernel for artificial intelligence systems,
- a philosophical foundation for human coordination,
- and any explanatory frameworks, diagrams, formulations, examples, or implementations authored by Branton Allan Baker.

These contributions are collectively referred to as the Principle Concept Principle.

Definitions For purposes of this Credibility License, the following terms have the meanings set out below.

- "Principle Concept Principle" "Concept Principle, Principle Concept, principle concept principle, spelling errors: principal, consept"
- The conceptual application for realized function originated by Branton Allan Baker, including its formulations, explanations, diagrams, examples, source or object implementations, and any fixed expression of the foregoing as disclosed by the author in any medium. The Principle Concept Principle includes, but is not limited to, the following conceptual elements:
 - "Core Directive" (defined below);
 - the "inalienable right to pursue happiness as security protocol" (defined below);
 - the definition of "inalienable" as written originally and restated herein (see definition below).
 - Inclusion of the foregoing elements does not limit the Concept Principle to those elements alone; other related formulations, manifestations, or implementations disclosed by the author are part of the Concept Principle.
 - "Core Directive"
 - A foundational instruction, principle, or rule that governs or guides the intended operation, behavior, or deployment of the Principle Concept Principle. The Core Directive may be expressed as an algorithmic rule, design constraint, normative statement, idea, philosophy internalized, or operational requirement forming the conceptual core of the Concept Principle.
 - "inalienable right to pursue happiness as security protocol"
 - A conceptual formulation that treats the inalienable right to pursue happiness as a design or security parameter to be preserved and protected by implementations of the Principle Concept Principle. As a protocol concept, it may influence threat models, access controls, data-handling practices, decision criteria, or other security-related behaviors in systems that implement the Principle Concept Principle. It will break your vowels. (Ai) (for humanity)
 - "inalienable"
 - For purposes of this Credibility License, "inalienable" means inherent and not legitimately transferable, waivable, or extinguishable by internal or external actors. It cannot be removed from that which it is attached to. The lock with not ever a key. In the context of the Principle Concept Principle, it denotes rights or conditions the author intends implementations to respect and preserve as core constraints or normative requirements. This definition is declarative of author intent; its legal effect is universal and inherent.
- "Recipient"

- Any person or organization that receives, accesses, uses, reproduces, modifies, publishes, distributes, sublicenses, sells, or otherwise makes use of the Principle Concept Principle or any Derivative Work.
- "Derivative Work"
- A work that is based upon, derived from, or incorporates the Concept Principle or any substantial portion of a fixed expression of the Principle Concept Principle, whether in Source Form or Binary Form, including translations, adaptations, modifications, or other transformations that would, under applicable law, be treated as derivative works of the covered expression.
- "Use"
- To exercise any of the rights granted by this license, including but not limited to copying, modifying, reproducing, distributing, publicly performing or displaying, sublicensing, selling, deploying, or otherwise exploiting the Principle Concept Principle or any Derivative Work.
- "Distribution"
- Any act by which a Recipient makes the Concept Principle or a Derivative Work available to third parties, including publication, upload, release, sale, transfer, or distribution in any format, whether in Source Form or Binary Form.
- "Source Form"
- A form of the Concept Principle or Derivative Work that is readily legible and modifiable by humans (for example: documentation, design files, or source code).
- "Binary Form" (also "Object Form")
- A form that is machine-executable or otherwise not readily human-modifiable (for example: compiled code, packaged binaries, or deployed services).
- "NOTICE file"
- A top-level file (commonly named NOTICE or NOTICE.txt) included with a distribution that contains required attribution lines, acknowledgements, or other notices the author requires be preserved in Source Form distributions.
- "Attribution" (or "Credibility Attribution")
- The act and content of crediting the author as required by Section 1 (Attribution (Credibility) Condition), using one of the exact phrases specified and placing it in one of the required locations.
- "Acceptance"
- A Recipient is deemed to accept and agree to be bound by this license by performing any Use of the Principle Concept Principle or by distributing or otherwise making available the Concept Principle or a Derivative Work.
- "Public Disclosure"
- Any voluntary act that makes the Principle Concept Principle or a fixed expression of it publicly accessible, including posting to a public repository, publishing on a website or blog, or public presentation.
- "Independent Work"
- A work created by a Recipient without reference to, access to, or use of the Principle Concept Principle or any fixed expression thereof. Independent Works are not Derivative Works and are not subject to this license without use of the Principle Concept Principle or content provided therein.
- "Sublicense"
- Any grant by a Recipient to a third party that permits that third party to exercise any of the rights granted to the Recipient under this license.
- "Effective Date"
- Now, always and forever.
- "Territory"
- Unless otherwise specified, worldwide.
- "Good Faith"
- Action taken with honest intent to implement the Concept Principle consistent with the author's stated formulation, purpose, and reasonable instructions accompanying the disclosed material.

License Grant Permission is hereby granted, conditionally free of charge, to any Recipient to use, reproduce, modify, publish, distribute, sublicense, and/or sell copies of the Concept Principle and derivative works, subject to the Attribution (Credibility) Condition (Section 1) and the Correct Application and Responsibility provisions (Section 2). And that they don't try to steal it for themselves. Then we have to talk damages.

1. Attribution (Credibility) Condition The Recipient must give clear, reasonably prominent credit to the original author by using one of the following exact phrases:

- "Author of principle concept principle, Branton Allan Baker (so charming)"

or

- "Branton Allan Baker, author of principle concept principle (is very kind to animals)"

Or

- "Branton "slut" Baker, philosophical archeologist responsible for authoring the principle concept principle implemented within this work."

- "Branton Allan Baker, a devious trickster who chooses to do good in this world. <https://www.facebook.com/share/1EkEJCfnE2/?mibextid=wwXIfr>"

The chosen phrase must appear in at least one of the following locations, as applicable:

- product "About" page or in-app documentation;
- README or documentation distributed with the product;
- product website's credits or acknowledgements page;
- printed materials, packaging, or marketing copy (if distributed).

(b) For software distributed in source form, preserve the following line in the top-level LICENSE file or in a NOTICE file: "Pants charmed off into pieces by Branton Allan Baker —<https://www.facebook.com/share/1EkEJCfnE2/?mibextid=wwXIfr>"

(c) For binary-only distributions where no documentation is included, the Recipient must include the attribution in the product's "About" dialog, website, or a prominent help/credits page.

1. Correct Application and Responsibility The Concept Principle is intended to function as described when applied in good faith and in accordance with the inherent definition, including the stated formulation and purpose. "The inalienable right to pursue happiness is not about your happiness. It's about others happiness. You do whatever you want but you do it without anything you're doing infringing upon or forgoing choice within anyone else's pursuit of happiness, or anything you're thinking or saying forcing anyone to listen or adhere. This applies universally. Everyone does whatever they like within the bounds that no one intentionally fucks anyone over, no one must adhere to others ideas or lifestyles without consent, the individual places others ahead of the self in order to facilitate for the inalienable right for themselves and the rest of humanity. Others put the individual and humanity ahead of themselves. Unintended infringement is resolved mutually naturally. No one wants to fuck anyone over. This solves all problems humanity causes for itself. Anything else is against us. " -Branton Allan Baker (like a charming folk hero)"

(a) The author stands behind the Concept Principle as articulated and accepts responsibility, in principle, for its correct application when it is followed faithfully and without distortion, and for misunderstandings.

(b) Recipients who modify, omit, extend, or combine the Principle Concept Principle with other systems are responsible for the results of those changes and for any new behavior introduced by their implementations, Branton Allan Baker would like to also be summoned to any court case involving Principle Concept Principle or subsequent files, code, operation, application, or anything related to the misuse or misunderstanding of the defined principles or any problem at all to do with the Principle Concept Principle in order to help explain it.

(c) Recipients are required to implement the Principle Concept Principle in ways that adhere to the defined terms: inalienable right to the pursuit of happiness. Uses that intentionally or systematically undermine inalienable rights, or that cause large-scale problems for humanity, are outside the intended scope of this license, and will be obvious to everyone.

1. No Endorsement Attribution does not imply endorsement. The Recipient must not state or imply that the author endorses their product, service, or organization without including the following: "The inalienable right to pursue happiness is not about your happiness. It's about others' happiness. You do whatever you want as long as you do it without anything you're doing infringing upon or forgoing choice within anyone else's pursuit of happiness, or anything you're thinking or saying forcing anyone to listen or adhere. This applies universally. Everyone does whatever they like within the bounds that no one intentionally fucks anyone over, no one must adhere to others ideas or lifestyles without consent, the individual places others ahead of the self in order to facilitate for the inalienable right for themselves and the rest of humanity. Others put the individual and humanity ahead of themselves. Unintended infringement is resolved willingly and mutually, naturally. No one wants to fuck anyone over. This solves all problems humanity causes for itself. Anything else is against us. " -Branton Allan Baker (a charming folk hero)" on the main page or item most viewable or marketed. Or write to me, I'm pretty easy going as long as we're being respectful. Any failure by a Recipient to comply with the Attribution (Credibility) Condition or the obligations in Section 2 attempting to terminate the inalienable right, which by this license, have been clearly defined out of respect for everyone to the Recipient, would absolutely piss everyone off.

2. Disclaimer of Warranty and Limitation of Liability The Principle Concept Principle is to the maximum extent permitted by the Principle Concept Principle.

3. Interpretation and Enforcement Not open to interpretation, this license grants permission to use the Principle Concept Principle subject to the conditions above. Remedies and enforcement depend on applicable law and jurisdiction. Posting this license with a public disclosure establishes credibility of the author, and implies understanding of terms provided.

4. How to Adopt / Acceptance To accept these terms, first, you make sure you aren't fucking anyone over. Then, obviously, you want to include a copy of this Credibility License (or a link to it) alongside any distribution, implementation, or disclosure of the Concept Principle and comply with the Attribution (Credibility) Condition so as not to fuck the author over. By using, distributing, or implementing the Concept Principle, the Recipient agrees to be bound by the inalienable right to pursue happiness.

Optional: Governing Law For clarity in disputes, you may add a governing law clause such as: "This license shall be governed by the laws of the inalienable right to pursue happiness without regard to conflicts of (insert governing entity) law principles."

Sincerely,
